

Municipality of Campli

Campli is an Italian town counting around 7.279 citizens in the Province of Teramo - Abruzzo Region, and it is part of the local territorial authority "Comunità Montana della Laga". The town is well known for its religious, civil and historical architectures like the Necropolis of Campo Valano dating back to the VI and V centuries B.C. or the National Archaeological Museum, located in the Franciscan Convent.

After the Roman era, the new statutes of Campli witness about a huge district protected by walls and accessible through doors and bridges - the East Door (also known as Angevin, or St. John Door) is unfortunately the only one survived. Campli is also a relevant site for religious tourism as it hosts the unique Holy Stairs, a unique fabric leaning on the side of the Church of St. Paul and the Church of Santa Maria in Platea where one of the 23 Holy Doors of Abruzzo has been open for the Extraordinary Jubilee of Mercy that will last until the 20th of November 2016.

Especially during the summer period, the territory hosts many traditional food events, such as the feast of pizza, the truffle festival and an important Festival of Jazz music. Every last weekend of August, since 1964, Campli organises the famous Porchetta Festival - which is the oldest food festival organized in Abruzzo and one of the oldest in Italy. Since then, every year, the festival welcomes a huge audience.

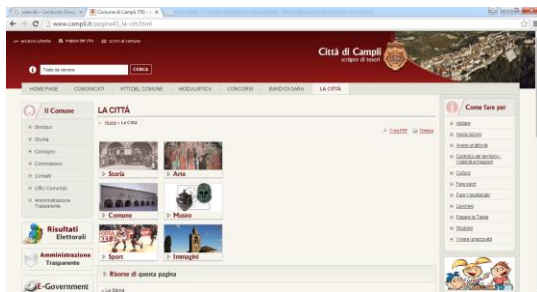

The local economy is in fact focused on local traditional products and related activities – mainly trade, crafts and manufacturing, but also breeding and agriculture, as well as tourism.

The revitalization of the historical center through the development of sustainable economies and the valorization of typicalities are still a main objective for the town and its inhabitants.

Project Ideas and Roles

The municipality of Camppl would like to act as partner in a project promoting traditions, culture and tourism as means for sustainable development but we are also open to further ideas to prepare a common ground for building a long term cooperation with interested municipalities. The project could be a first step to let stakeholders meet and discuss further possibilities of cooperation, also in connection to other EU opportunities (funding programmes and relevant initiatives - e.g. COSME Tourism etc.).
